"The Need of the Church for the Charity Worker" was the theme of an eloquent sermon, delivered by Rev. John Van Schaick, jr., pastor of the Church of Our Father, Universalist, yesterday mornthe church needed the charity worker; that the charity worker needed the church, and that, therefore, the relation country, and particularly in this city, and spoke of the different phases through which charity had to go until it has now become a science, which is administered in a practical and most satisfactory man-

The work of the Associated Charities was brought to the knowledge of the congregation, and referring thereto the speaker said, in part:

"The Associated Charities through one committee started the fight against tuberculosis. The result has been an educaional campaign of great value, the establishment of a free dispensary, and an appropriation from Congress for the erection of a tuberculosis hospital. Through another committee it has done great work in summer outlings for poor hildren and tired mothers. Last summer $3,500 was raised and speat. This ummer, $4,500. Still a third committee attacked insanitary tenements, and a fourth established playgrounds for Wash-

I have said enough, however, to suggest that here is a social movement of remendous interest and importance.

"In the spread of the movement thousands of workers have been enlisted. Some are volunteers. Some are paid. Some we may call amateurs. Some are professionals. To some the work is in-cidental to another occupation. To others it is a life study and a life work. Lauded as "the Gallant Commander of Battery B" of the Iron Brigade. Son of the Leader Draws Draperies from the Monument-Gen. Bragg Among the Speakers.

With simple, yet impressive, ceremonies he monument erected in Arlington Cemetery to the memory of Maj. Charles Stewart, commander of Battery B, of the Iron red about the grave were members of harge at Gettysburg; representatives of he Grand Army of the Republic, members of the Army and Navy Union, and the widow, son, and daughter of the offi-

Gen. W. W. Dudley, former Commisioner of Pensions, presided, and introduced as the first speaker Charles H. McConnell, through whose generosity a monument now marks the grave of Maj. Stewart. Mr. McConnell referred briefly to Maj. Stewart's career as a soldier, characterizing him as a brave man, who simply did his duty as he saw it.

"The gallant commander of Battery B," said Mr. McConnell, "whose guns were always the first to be brought into action, and the last to retire, was no hero, but an American soldier, who fought with all the strength of a brave heart for the preservation of his country and the flag he loved."

Mr. McConnell referred briefly to the events which led to the erection of the monument, saying that it was not meet that the grave of an honored soldier like Maj. Stewart should remain unmarked.

Unveiled by His Son. At the conclusion of Mr. McConnell's address Thomas Stewart, the son of Maj. Stewart, unveiled the monument, a plain granite shaft bearing the dates of the birth and death of Maj. Stewart. Gen. Edward S. Bragg, at one time commander of the Iron Brigade, was the next speaker. "I shall not speak in words of fulsome praise of the gallant Stewart," said Gen. Bragg, "He was a man not of words, but of action, and his spirit would repudiate a culogy of his deeds. He was cool always, but coolest in action, when he heard the thunder of his guns as they oore death and destruction into the ranks of the enemy. Simple and brave he was, man loved and respected by his men. Fear never entered where he was. He was 'plain Jim Stewart,' and no member of the Iron Brigade still living would hesitate to drop a tear to his memory." Tribute to his services were paid also by Gen. Dudley, who spoke in part as "We wish his widow and his children to know that the love we bore our com-panion and friend was born of our first greeting, when he joined the corps and division and brigade in 1861, on this very ground, where we spent our first winter together. It was fostered and grew into adoration during the years of hardship and service which followed, and still lives. Under him as soldiers of Battery B were the pick of our own volunteers, detailed from each company of our regiment. From their lips we learned of his courage, virtues, and invariable justice.

Will Not Be Neglected, "We have gathered to see the veiling removed from the noble monument which

Rev. Dr. Weston Bruner, pastor, and a loving comrade's hands have raised to none who view it for the first time will ever forget the occasion. You may rest nate condition which has developed, and and his memory honored."
